Captain Creagh was detached from Dacca with two companies of his battalion to protect the village of Kan: Dacca, on the Cabul River, against a threatened incursion of the Mohmuds, and reached that place the same night. On the following morning the detachment, 150 men, was attacked by the Mohmuds in overwhelming numbers, about 200; and the inhabitants of Kan: Dacca having themselves taken part with the enemy, Captain Creagh found himself under the necessity of retiring from the village. He took up a position in a cemetery not far off, which he made as defensible as circumstances would admit of, and this position he held against all the efforts of the enemy, repeatedly repulsing them with the bayonet until three o'clock in the afternoon, when he was relieved by a detachment sent for the purpose from Dacca.
